Economic Environment

The first quarter was defined by the beginning of the pandemic due to the new coronavirus (Covid-19). Initially, the cases were concentrated in Asia, however, since March, the number of people affected has shown a sharp rise worldwide, which led to the adoption of measures to stop the virus from spreading. Thus, there was a halt in activities worldwide and forecasts for the performance of the global economy now point to a strong recession. As a result, many countries have announced monetary- and tax-stimulus measures in an attempt to mitigate the effects on the economy.

Given the uncertainties brought by the pandemic, there was a sharp increase in risk aversion in the markets, making asset prices to fall and the US Dollar to appreciate against other currencies, including the Real. In addition, the decline in demand for oil and disagreements between producing countries led to a further decrease in the price of this commodity, intensifying the volatility in financial markets.

The already known indicators show that the adopted isolation measures and the suspension of activities led to a retraction of the economy in March, which should be more intense in April. The need to fight the pandemic and its effects on the economy has also led to the national adoption of stimulus measures, with relevant tax impacts, but restrained to 2020, so far.

With a high idleness and low commodity prices, inflation had a downward trend in the first months of the year, allowing the continuation of the cycle of reductions in the basic interest rate, which reached the lowest level in history at the May meeting, at 3.00% per year.

However, despite the high uncertainty due to the pandemic, we reinforce our positive view for the Brazilian economy in the long-run, including the inflation under control, floating exchange rates and tax austerity - despite the justified deviation in the short term, with increased government spending to mitigate the impacts of the crisis on the economy.
